RESCUE SQUAD ARM PATCH

The design for this patch was originated by Betty Rhodenheiser who has to her past credit the creation of the Roanoke County Seal. It was chosen by a special committee, from several designs submitted, for its allusion to the ideals of friendship and service as well as the historical significance it conveys. The design was then passed on to a local artist, Mary Bartelt, who developed it for final approval by the entire Squad. Diane B. Schrock, member of the interpretive staff at Appomattox Cort House National Historical Park, provided invaluable assistance regarding the official decoration of both the Union and the Confederate General's sleeves so the patch would accurately reflect the reconciliation of opposing sides.

Striking in its simplicity, yet diverse in its meaning, the Appomattox County Rescue Squad's arm patch is an outstanding example of fine artistry and high ideals worn in the proudest tradition of service to our fellow man.

Carrington Martin

Candidate Cites Need For Youth Bureau

Carrington Martin, an independent candidate for Sheriff of Campbell County, has cited the need for establishing a full-time youth bureau in the Sheriff's Department to combat growing drug abuse in the county.

In presenting his platform at an organizational meeting last week, Martin noted that such a youth bureau would assist in providing guidance for young people on the dangers of drug abuse.

Communications was another prime area Martin covered in his platform address. "Law enforcement must be more than a one-way street. It must be an open road along which the communication between law enforcement officers, the community they serve and other law enforcement agencies," Martin said.

The candidate promised that the Sheriff's Department would become a listening post for anyone who needs help. "A cry for help can only be heard by those who listen," Martin said. "No member of the Sheriff's Department will ever be too busy to listen."

Among the goals Martin listed in his platform were to reduce the time required to respond to a complaint, to dispatch incoming calls promptly to the nearest vehicle in the area of the complaint, and to study the feasibility of providing multiple telephone communications to the Sheriff's Department 24 hours a day.

Pastor Speaks

Helping Where They Hurt

In years past almost every Sunday found great crowds of people, especially in small towns, flocking to their churches to hear the word of God. These times are gone forever. Today's people flock to the lakes, the beaches, the stock car races, the professional football games, or to the bed for their Sunday recreation.

What can be done about it? Some might be tempted to throw up their hands in holy horror and say that the situation is impossible. Paul's answer was to say, "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some," (I Corinthians 9:22). His meaning was that he did everything possible to reach all people by any means possible. He went where the people were. He helped them where they hurt. He went out to seek them and sought to lead them to a saving relationship to Jesus Christ.

A modern apostle of this way of thinking is Brother Bill Frazier who has proclaimed himself as the unofficial chaplain of the Grand National Circuit of stock-car racers. Brother Bill is a tall, slim, thirty-year old from Gadsden, Alabama. Each week during the stockcar racing season he follows the crowds around to the races and holds services on Sunday morning before the big races begin. His work is carried on in a red, white, and blue camper's tent with canvas and wooden stools which seat twenty. His services are very simple and straightforward, about twenty-five minutes long.

Bill Frazier feels that the people on the stockcar circuit need a pastor too. He is there seeking to help these people where they hurt.

What about you? You, too, know some people who hurt. There is the sick person down the street from you. There are those people whom you can indifferent who use the cloak of indifference to hide their deepest doubts. There are those who are hateful and spiteful, but who nevertheless are very, very searching questions.

What do we do? We seek to help them where they are, assist them where they ache, and bring them to a saviour who is able to reach all men exactly where they are and bring them to himself. What are you doing to meet the world's needs? Are you lounging at home and hurling indictments at those who don't care? Wake up from your easy slumber! Become a person who does all things to reach all men to bring them into a life transforming relationship with Jesus Christ the Son of God.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

CHRISTIAN ATHEISTS

Lesson for May 30, 1971

Background Scripture: Isaiah 10:5-15; 14:24-27.
Devotional Reading: Isaiah 35.

"Terrible!" said Hiram*.

"Scandalous!" retorted Emily*.

"Shocking!" exploded Ralph*.

This was a fair sampling of responses by many of the good church people of Afton* to an article in the local Sunday paper concerning the public pronouncements of a now infamous atheist. "There is no God," the atheist was quoted as saying, "and the sooner people give up their superstitious religious practices, the quicker this world will know peace and prosperity for everyone!"

Slightly dishonest

"Terrible!" Hiram had exclaimed. He is sales manager for a local discount store. Much of that store's success was attributable to Hiram's shrewd - and often, slightly dishonest - merchandising tactics. These included "marking down" prices that had been previously over-inflated, making price comparisons on products that only seemed comparative in quality, holding "bargain sales" that weren't really "bargains," failing to mention extra "hidden costs," and staying open Sundays and holidays in defiance of local closing laws. Hiram's success was recognized by his church when he was elected a trustee, a move that was resented by some members of the church whose own businesses had suffered in competition with Hiram's tactics.

"Everyone does it!"

"Scandalous!" Emily had said. She is a bookkeeper for a small company that makes precision missile parts for the government's space program. Emily, a teacher of youth in the church school, likes her job very much. The salary is excellent and the working conditions are ideal. When she first took the job she was disturbed to learn that it was unwritten policy to falsify entries on cost data. But when she was told that "everyone does this kind of thing on government contracts," she decided it wasn't worth losing her job. As a result, she never even thinks about it anymore.

"Shocking!" had been the explosive response of Ralph, a superintendent in his church school for more that twenty years. He was also a clerk in the city licensing bureau, a job he had gotten through political patronage and kept by doing what was expected of him. What was "expected of him" included giving preference to firms and individuals that "voted right" and financially supported the party. It sometimes even included "looking the other way" when some of the bigger firms in the party were guilty of violations of building regulations. Doing "what was expected" didn't trouble Ralph, for he reasoned that "that's the way it is done" and the other parties are the same if it got a chance.

An atheism of the heart

There we are again. Those men who reject virtually all the suggestion that there is a God. Strange that they should cling so tenaciously to them that their very existence is by much the same token a denial of their own existence.

This is the message of the prophet Isaiah. It is addressed to people of his own day and to people of ours who profess to believe in God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob- but they live their lives as though that denied their profession of faith. Regardless of what they said with their mouths, their actions proved the reality of their disbelief in the prophet.

So it is with the practical atheist. He does not say, "There is no God," he just lives that way!
